

We normally feel we have to screen all calls through an answering machine, so we don't pick-up and have to deal with a soliciter. So I think Wisconsin's No-Call law should stay pretty much as is for now at least. A possible concession would be a voluntary list people could put themselves on allowing phone solicitations, but it should be defined clearly enough to prevent getting on simply because a purchase was made, etc.